Senate Democrats unveil privacy bill with fines for privacy violations

Greater protections against mining.

Democratic senators proposed legislation on Tuesday that would set penalties for online companies like Alphabet Inc's Google and Facebook Inc if they mishandle users' personal data.

The measure comes at a time when the luster of the Big Tech platforms, once praised as one of the most dynamic parts of the U.S. economy, has faded because of data breaches and discomfort over what information about people is being collected and what it is used for.

The proposed bill, called the Consumer Online Privacy Rights Act, would allow people to see what information is collected about them, require that it be deleted and prevent its sale. It also allows consumers to file lawsuits if online businesses break rules.

Companies would also have to get a consumer's permission to share any sensitive data, which the bill defines broadly enough to include location, biometrics, email address or telephone number.

"The key thing is that obviously you have to have privacy rights. It should be clear and you should know what they are," Senator Maria Cantwell said in an interview.

Federal privacy legislation has been expected because of industry concern over California's new privacy law, and the prospect of other states passing measures that effectively create a patchwork of different rules across the country.

Cantwell said that her proposed bill spelled out what Democrats wanted in a privacy law. "We are in discussions with Republicans," she said.

In addition to Cantwell and Senator Amy Klobuchar, the bill is backed by Senators Brian Schatz and Ed Markey. The bill will be introduced when the Senate comes back from recess, a Cantwell aide said.

Under the measure, a new office within the Federal Trade Commission would enforce new privacy rules. It would be allowed to fine companies for privacy violations. The fines were not spelled out by the bill.

Cantwell's bill has similarities with California legislation, and would leave that law intact. REUTERS

U.S. starves 2020 census of funding

2 A new lawsuit in New York accuses the Trump administration of starving the U.S. Census Bureau of funding needed to avert an undercount of racial and ethnic minorities in the 2020 census, and deprive them of crucial federal funds and political representation. The Brooklyn-based nonprofit Center for Popular Democracy Action and the city of Newburgh, New York accused the government on Tuesday of arbitrarily, capriciously and irrationally slashing resources to count blacks, Hispanics, immigrants, the homeless and other members of "hard-to-count" communities. They hope to set aside decisions to hire one-third as many enumerators who physically visit homes as in 2010, halve census field offices and reduce community outreach, while ensuring that the government conduct the "actual enumeration" required by the U.S. Constitution. How Visit Philly's CEO is forging the path for a more inclusive Philadelphia

Jeff Guaracino is getting accolades for his work with LGBTQ, LatinX campaigns

Ever since Jeff Guaracino got the job as President and CEO of Visit Philly, the city's official tourism marketing agency, in 2018, he's made the most of his $1.25 million budget when it came to LGBTQ and LatinX marketing.

For those efforts, within the last month, Visit Philly and Guaracino has been gifted an Innovator of the Year Award by GayCities, a gay travel website, two awards from the U.S. Travel Association, and most recently, an Outstanding Association Award from the Philadelphia Inquirer's 2019 Diversity & Inclusion Awards Gala.

During the week of November 21, "National Geographic Traveler" released its "Best Trips 2020" issue, with 25 must-see destinations and transformative travel experiences. The only U.S. destinations to make the list was Philadelphia and the Grand Canyon.

And the year isn't over. Guarancino, an out gay man, doesn't do it for prizes. He does it for love and community and a city that deserves a bustling tourism industry, be it gay, straight, trans, non-binary, Black, White, Asian and Hispanic, all ages and beyond.

"I want to make Philadelphia shine on the world stage, and I want to do it through tourism," said Guaracino, who says that 45 million visitors come through the city's limits, annually, and that 103,000 hospitality workers are employed at hotels, restaurants and the like to make that visit pleasant. "It's an incredible, once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to tell the world about your hometown, my hometown."

A New Weapon For Burning, Tingling, Numb Legs and Feet

At less than $1 a day, it may be the most affordable solution yet for neuropathy discomfort

Steven Klayman, DC

BOSTON – An exciting clinical use survey study shows that a new cream can relieve leg and foot discomfort in just 15 minutes of applying.

And according to the study participants, burning, tingling, and numbness were the most common symptoms to be relieved.

The cream, called Neuriterx, recently developed by scientists in San Diego and became an instant hit among those suffering with neuropathy.

It's patent pending formula works within minutes of contacting the skin, initiating two phenomena's in the body.

The first phenomenon is known as vasodilation which triggers arteries to expand, improving circulation in the extremities.

The second is called TRPA1 activation and this is what really has people excited.

Research Shows Correlation Between Nerve Damage and Sensation

Published research shows that neuropathy symptoms arise when the nerves in your legs and feet break down and blood flow is lost to the areas which surround them.

As the nerves begin to die, sensation is lost. This lack of sensation is a major cause of burning, tingling, and numbness.

Remarkably, Neuriterx contains one of the few known substances to activate TRPA1, a special sensory pathway right below the skins surface which controls the sensitivity of nerves. It's these nerves that allow you to feel hot, cold, and touch.

And although this pathway has been known about for years, neither a drug or a pill has been able to target it successfully. That's why Neuriterx is so impressive.

"It all comes down to sensation. When sensation is lost the foot feels constantly asleep. It may also burn and tingle. When sensation is increased, these nagging symptoms often go away", explains Dr. Steven Klayman, company spokesperson for Neuriterx.

"That's why Neuriterx performed so well in our clinical use survey study. It increases sensation and blood flow wherever it's applied. It's impressive to say the least"

A Brilliant Technology Most Failed to Consider

Until now, many pharma companies have failed to develop a means of TRPA1 activation to manage neuropathy. Neuriterx is one of the first to take full advantage of this amazing discovery.

"Today's treatment methods have focused on minimizing discomfort instead of attacking its underlining cause. That's why millions of adults are still in excruciating discomfort every single day and are always battling effects" explains Klayman

"Neuriterx is different. Since the most commonly reported symptoms...burning, tingling and numb legs and feet...are caused by lack of sensation of the nerves, we've designed the formula increase their sensitivity.

And since these nerves are located right below the skin, we've chosen to formulate it as a cream. This allows for the ingredients to get to the site faster and without any serious side effects" he adds.

Study Finds Restoring Sensation the Key To Effective, Long Lasting Relief

With the conclusion of the human clinical use survey trial, the makers of Neuriterx are offering it nationwide. And regardless of the market, its sales are exploding.

Men and women from all over the country are eager to get their hands on the new cream and according to the results study participants reported, they should be.

In the trial above, participants taking Neuriterx as needed experienced relief in just 15 minutes after applying! Burning, tingling and numbness were the most commonly reported symptoms to improve.

Even more impressive, when asked if this was the best product they used for their legs and feet, 90% gave a resounding "Yes" with all participants concluding they would absolutely recommend it to someone else.

A breakthrough in neuropathy management and supportive care, Neuriterx is shown to provide relief from:

- Discomfort
- Numbness
- Tingling
- Swelling
- Poor Balance

Neuriterx is a topical cream that is to be applied directly the legs and feet. It does not require a prescription.

The active ingredient is a compound known as cinnamaldehyde.

Studies show that neuropathy and discomfort caused when peripheral nerves breakdown and blood is unable to circulate into your legs and feet.

As these nerves deteriorate, sensation is lost.

This is why you may not feel hot or cold and your legs and feet may burn, tingle and go numb.

Worse, without proper blood flow, tissues and cells in these areas begin to die, causing pain that seems to never go away.

AMAZING LEG AND FOOT RELIEF: Neuriterx increases sensation and blood flow wherever its applied. It's now being used to relieve burning, tingling, numbness among other discomforts.

The cinnamaldehyde in Neuriterx is one of the very few compounds in that can activate TRPA1, a special sensory pathway that runs through your entire body.

According to published research, activating this pathway increases the sensitivity of nerves, relieving feelings of tingling and numbness in your legs and feet.

Supporting ingredients boost blood flow, support cellular health and stimulate the nerves for increased sensation.

Amazing Relief Exactly Where You Need It

With daily use, Neuriterx users report remarkable improvements in their quality of life without of the serious side effects or interactions associated with prescription drugs.

Readers can now enjoy an entirely new level of comfort that's both safe and affordable.

Users have found is also extremely effective, especially if nothing else has worked with 90% ravings it's the best leg and foot product they've ever tried.

Trump administration seeks to put judge's order for McGahn testimony on hold

U.S. Justice Department lawyers asked a judge on Tuesday to put on hold a ruling requiring former White House Counsel Don McGahn to testify to U.S. lawmakers as part of the Democratic-led impeachment probe against President Donald Trump.

The Trump administration's court filing asked U.S. District Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson to put her Monday ruling on hold while the Trump administration appeals it to a higher court.

The judge on Monday rejected the Trump administration's claim of broad immunity protecting current and former senior White House officials from being compelled to testify before Congress, saying that no one is above the law.

The White House has directed current and former officials not to testify or provide documents sought in the House of Representatives impeachment inquiry centered on the Republican president's actions toward Ukraine and in other Democratic-led investigations.

Trump, writing on Twitter on Tuesday, said he would "love" to let officials like Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, Energy Secretary Rick Perry and acting White House Chief of Staff Mick Mulvaney testify in the impeachment inquiry. Trump added, "It is a Democrat Scam that is going nowhere but, future Presidents should in no way be compromised."

McGahn, who left his post in October 2018, last May defied a subpoena from the House Judiciary Committee to testify about Trump's efforts to impede the now-completed special counsel investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. election. The subpoena was issued months before the House opened its impeachment inquiry centering on Trump's request that Ukraine carry out investigations that could undermine his domestic political adversaries.

The Justice Department, representing McGahn in his former official capacity, said in a court filing that the Judiciary Committee had agreed to a seven-day temporary delay in enforcing the subpoena. If the judge does not immediately impose that delay, the department would file an emergency application on Wednesday at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, the administration lawyers said.

The department lawyers wrote in their filing on Tuesday that the judge's ruling was only the second in U.S. history requiring a senior presidential adviser to testify before Congress and that the dispute raises "significant and difficult separation-of-powers questions." Separation of powers is a term that refers to the U.S. Constitution assigning different authority to the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the U.S. government.

McGahn's personal lawyer said on Monday that he would comply with the subpoena if it is not blocked.

Charles Cooper, a lawyer for Trump's former national security adviser John Bolton, indicated that the judge's ruling would not pave the way for Bolton or one of Bolton's former aides, Charles Kupperman, to testify in the impeachment probe.

Bolton, who left his White House job in September, has joined a separate lawsuit filed by Kupperman seeking a ruling on whether they must comply with a House subpoena. Cooper represents Kupperman and Bolton. REUTERS

Global temperature rises could bring 'destructive' effects, U.N. says

Global temperatures could rise sharply this century with "wide-ranging and destructive" consequences after greenhouse gas emissions hit record levels last year, international climate experts warned on Tuesday.

The head of the World Meteorological Organization said global temperatures could rise by 3-5 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels this century - more than three times agreed limits - if nothing is done to stop rising emissions.

Greenhouse gas emissions surged to a record level last year, the United Nations said in its "Emissions Gap Report," released ahead of U.N. climate talks in Madrid next week aimed at spurring world leaders to limit climate change.

It measures the amount of emissions cuts needed to limit global temperature rises to 1.5 degrees Celsius (2.7 Fahrenheit) above pre-industrial levels, as agreed in the 2015 Paris Agreement. The U.N. Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change last year warned of huge global changes if that target is not met, such as the loss of nearly all coral reefs and most Arctic sea ice.

Under current national pledges to cut emissions, "temperatures can be expected to rise by 3.2C this century, bringing wide-ranging and destructive climate impacts," said a summary of the report by the U.N. Environment Programme (UNEP).

"Being a grandfather - we don't want to leave that for our grandkids," the report's lead author John Christensen told a Geneva news conference.

"With 3 degrees we would lose a fairly big fraction of the current (agricultural) yield and areas like Africa where the population is growing would really suffer," said WMO Secretary-General Petteri Taalas.

The UNEP report said the safest temperature threshold set in Paris - of 1.5C - was still achievable, but would require emissions cuts of 7.6% a year between 2020-2030. Limiting the rise to 2C it would mean annual cuts of 2.7%.

"We are talking about transformational change now - incremental change simply will not make it. We simply need to transform societies in the next 10 years," Christensen said.

The report showed that emissions, including those from land-use change such as deforestation, had not yet peaked and rose to a record 55.3 gigatonnes of carbon dioxide equivalent in 2018.

Christensen urged countries that had met their targets comfortably, such as Turkey and Russia, to tighten them significantly.

The report named the United States as one of several large emitters, alongside Brazil and Japan, falling short of its own targets, or Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs). This month, the Trump administration filed paperwork to quit the Paris Agreement in the first step of a formal withdrawal process.

Some officials have downplayed the impact of the U.S. move, saying that companies as well as states and cities have boosted commitments to fight climate change.

Still, UNEP's executive-director Inger Andersen urged Washington to reconsider. "So, the bottom line here is, stick, stay at the table, negotiate, engage and ensure that we, together, can move forward on climate action."

Countries face a 2020 deadline to set more ambitious emissions cut pledges. "Had we done it 10 years ago, it would have been easier," said Andersen. REUTERS

DOUBLE STANDARD

We recently saw a woman who was trying to make a meager living by selling churros on a subway platform, taken away in handcuffs. On Sunday we saw someone (with money enough to afford to do it) set up a whole meal ON the subway but nothing was done about that, instead it was reported as something great and commendable. What kind of a double standard is this?

Wishing you a 'Merry Happy Whatever'

MOLLY GIVEN
MollyGiven@metro.us

The holidays are here, and no matter what you celebrate, getting together with family is always a recipe for some colorful moments, and in Netflix's latest multi-cam sitcom "Merry Happy Whatever" that's exactly what you get. Take one ambitious daughter coming home from the west coast to Philadelphia (Bridgit Mendler), add in a sprinkle of a loveable yet clueless "rockstar" boyfriend (Brent Morin), a dash of a sister who is going through some immense changes in her life (Ashley Tisdale), layers of other relatives in a whacky tradition-based family and finish it off with a strict yet fiercely loyal father (Dennis Quaid) and you've got yourself one massive feast of a relatable show that is timed perfectly to the holiday season. Brent Morin, Bridgit Mendler and Ashley Tisdale all sat down with Metro to chat about the show, what they love about having the story set around the holidays and dive into what they hope audiences take away from "Merry Happy Whatever."

How would you describe your characters?

Brent: Matt is a very optimistic hopeless romantic who has a decent sense of delusional confidence, but his heart is always in the right place. He's got this 'everything is going to be okay and I accept you for who you are' kind of attitude, and Dennis Quaid's character is the polar opposite of that — hence the conflict.

Bridgit: I would describe Emmy as a young career lady, but she also has this boyfriend, they're kind of this unconventional pair, but they still have a lot of love for each other. Her family is very unfamiliar with Brett's sort of rockstar lifestyle, so when Emmy brings him home for the holidays she's a little nervous about how they will respond. The Quinn family is more conservative and Emmy sort of reverts back into that which causes some strain in her relationship. But ultimately, she really loves her family and Matt and she wants everybody to get along well.

Ashley: Kayla is the middle child and she's a bit dramatic, but she's also faced with a lot of challenges throughout the season, so I think there's a reason for her emotional turbulence.

"Merry Happy Whatever" drops on Netflix Nov. 28. ADAM ROSE/NETFLIX

What do you particularly like about the multi-camera sitcom type of comedy?

Brent: I think that multi-cam sitcoms have always been a great kind of transition for stand-up comics. It's normal for an anxious comedian to kind of ad-lib, but I wanted to stick to what was on the page because I liked the story so much. For me personally, I moved out here to be an actor and a filmmaker, so just to be able to act aside from my comedy and getting to work with people like Dennis, Brigit, Adam and Ashley — it's just really nice to be involved in that kind of setting and learn from professionals.

Bridgit: The thing that I like about the multi-cam comedy is that it's kind of musical in its cadence. There is a lot of rhythm to how jokes fit together and particularly with Tucker's [Cawley] style of approaching multi-cam, he has a very specific vision for how lines will be delivered — it's like he hears it all in his head. So it felt like we were really coordinating together and doing this choreographed piece.

Why do you think having the holidays as the backdrop works for this particular storyline?

Ashley: I think that setting it during the holidays works especially when all of the kids come home and just the stress around that with what they are each going through.

Bridgit: I think it's just something about this time of year that is reflective for people. You go back home, you reconnect with family and it makes you nostalgic for the way things used to be or frustrated about the difficulty of life, and it challenges you to confront the events of your own life. What you see with the characters are these people bringing the challenges of their own life into the Christmas season, a lot of stuff comes to the surface and the family is forced to process it all at once.

They were potentially thinking of an anthology series focusing on different holidays each season, what holiday would you like to see be the setting next?

Brent: I don't really know where the show is going, that's all on Tucker the mastermind, but someone had mentioned Fourth of July in the Bahamas and I would not be opposed to that. I think the way the show is set up, it could go in any direction. But definitely not Thanksgiving, I have no will power and would not want to gain 20 pounds in one season.

Bridgit: April Fool's Day: a whole season of pranks.

Ashley: I think Fourth of July would be really fun, especially since we shoot during the summer, that'd be really nice and very patriotic.

Overall on set, how was it working with everyone?

Brent: It was amazing. You always run the risk of there being drama, but that didn't happen on this show. Everybody gets along like a little family to be honest. I was a production assistant on "Conan" for four years before landing my first sitcom, so I truly believe it starts from the top — Conan [O'Brien] was such a sweet and loving guy and it's the same here with Dennis. He was so open, loving and ready to give advice, he even came to a stand-up show of mine which I thought was hilarious.

Ashley: We all really organically became a family. Dennis set the tone for that, just who he is as an actor and how great of a person he is, we all just loved to hang out with each other and be on set.

What do you hope audiences take away from the show?

Brent: My hope is that they take away that we are not as different as we think we are, we're not alone. The great thing about Netflix is that you can binge the show and it comes out right by the holidays, so my hope is that there is a Matt who is visiting a family and they put on this show and it helps him.

Ashley: I hope they fall in love with the Quinn family. I fell in love with the Quinn family watching it, they're such a cute and crazy family but I love that they have all of these traditions and they make an effort — there is just a lot of love between them. I hope that it gets people in the holiday spirit and that they can relate to this family dynamic as well.

Bridgit: I hope that they can find things that they identify with in the show and that they can laugh and sympathize with the characters and feel even more for all of the quirky and eccentric things that are bound to come up in the holiday season.

Rian Johnson returns from a galaxy far, far away with the fun murder-mystery, 'Knives Out'

CLAIRE FOLGER

Writer-director Rian Johnson has had one of the great indie-movie success stories of the past 20 years. In 2005, he burst onto the scene with his confident paperback noir meets high-school drama "Brick" that not only announced Joseph Gordon-Levitt as a powerhouse actor, but Johnson as one of the most original filmmakers of his generation. From there, he released two critically acclaimed films, "The Brothers Bloom" and "Looper," which both saw his profile rise considerably, but not to the height the writer and director would have ever expected. In 2017, Johnson was tapped by Lucasfilm to write and direct the next installment of the ongoing "Star Wars" franchise: "Star Wars: Episode VIII - The Last Jedi." After all of the pressure that came with making that film, and all of the successes that came with it, where the hell can you go from there? For Johnson, he decided to get back to his roots with his new murder-mystery, "Knives Out," in theaters this week.

The highly entertaining ensemble film follows a private detective named Benoit Blanc, played by Daniel Craig, who has been hired by an unknown benefactor to investigate the death of an elderly and well-regarded crime novelist named Harlan Thrombey (Christopher Plummer). Thrombey had passed away late in the night in his home after his 85th birthday party which had been attended by his family: his real estate mogul daughter Linda (Jamie Lee Curtis) and her husband Richard (Don Johnson), Richard and Linda's trust-fund-clinging rich kid son Hugh "Ransom" (Chris Evans), his Gwyneth Paltrow-like lifestyle guru daughter-in-law Joni (Toni Collette), his son Walt (Michael Shannon) who handles the publishing of his mystery novels along with his wife Donna (Riki Lindhome) and their right-wing Twitter troll son, Jacob (Jaeden Martell).

Also in attendance at the party, and suspected in the murder of Harlan, are Harlan's housekeeper Fran (Edi Patterson) and his nurse Marta, played by the exceptional Ana de Armas. Marta's character is the heart of the film and we follow her as she tries to make sense of this "whodunit" along with Blanc and the two local detectives on the scene, Detective Elliot (Lakeith Stanfield) and Trooper Wagner (Noah Segan).

When I speak to Johnson over the phone, I ask him if writing "Knives Out" felt like getting back to his roots after such a large undertaking with "Jedi" and the many expectations surrounding it.

"One thing that was similar that did feel nice was coming back to making a movie very quickly," says Johnson. "With this film, I sat down to write it last January — January 2018 — and we had wrapped the movie by Christmas. It happened really, really quick. That was the biggest contrast with 'Star Wars,' actually. 'Star Wars' was an amazing experience, but it took four years to make one movie. It felt really good to get back to the speed of, 'let's jump in there and make something fun.'"

"For me," he adds, "it's always hard to describe how the experience of doing 'The Last Jedi' was. That didn't feel like a limiting factor with it. Really what I was tapping into was my connection with it going back to when I was 5 years old. It's been such a part of my heart for all of my life, basically. The personal side, that aspect of it is the thing that you're really tapping into when you're writing. Which, hopefully, that's the same with any movie. With ['Knives Out'] it was like that but with all of the stuff I loved about Agatha Christie and [her character] Hercule Poirot. With that, it's strikingly similar."

The love of Agatha Christie's seminal mystery novels such as "Murder on the Orient Express" run through the film, and Craig's performance as Blanc creates a character that you can't help but be captivated by and to root for. I ask Johnson if he hopes to partner up to solve more foul-play murders with Craig in the future and if playing with this genre could lead to more ensemble films down the road.

"I don't want to get ahead of myself, we'll see how this one does! If this one does well, it would be a thrill to get together with Daniel every few years to do another one of these," says Johnson. "You can see with Agatha Christie's books, the mystery genre is so malleable. You can do so much with it. The idea of totally shaking it up the next time and doing something very new but still in this mode with that same character who Daniel and I had so much fun with. I think Daniel had so much fun making that character. Yeah, I'd do it again in a heartbeat."

While this film does have the feel of a classic mystery, part of what tears apart the Thrombey family in the wake of Harlan's death — aside from his vast fortune in limbo — is that many of them hold political opinions that are at the core of what many of us will be trying not to argue about while clenching our teeth during Thanksgiving dinner this year. In fact, the only thing that brings them together is their pursuit in trying to figure out who will benefit the most once the truth is revealed.

"For me, that was the interesting thing about this," says Johnson of the film's timely political musings. "Drawing across the spectrum, from right to left and then really digging into the very human thing that's driving each of them which is something that they consider to be there's is threatened. And the very human thing of how you react to that kind of thing. When you're scared of losing something you think is yours. We hope this movie has a light touch with it. First and foremost, it's a really fun murder mystery. But, it does have these layers and it definitely does have a perspective of what's going on."

3 Last-minute tips for a perfect Thanksgiving dinner

For a lot of people, heading into Thanksgiving dinner can be a headache. The thought of preparing a massive meal for your friends and family is understandably daunting, especially for those who like to wait until the last minute to get things done. Take the stress out of the kitchen with our quick tips for the holiday.

Use your time wisely

If there's 24 hours left on the clock and you at least have a turkey already thawing in the fridge, then you don't need to sweat too much about preparing for the big day. In fact, there's a lot that you can get done the night before, leaving you free to focus on the star of the show, the bird in the oven, as well as any roasting of vegetables and other quick accompaniments on Thanksgiving Day. From gravy to cranberry sauce to stuffing and macaroni and cheese, the majority of sides can, and probably should, be made the night before. The same goes for most desserts. Not only does it free your hands to tackle the turkey, but gravy, sauces and most cooked sides just tend to taste better the next day after the flavors have had time to come together.

Have an app ready

Keep the turkey vultures at bay and out of the kitchen with a few snacks before the big meal. Something light, but plentiful should do the trick, like a cheese and charcuterie board. Or if you're feeling adventurous and have a few extra ingredients lying around from your sides and sauces, make a quick app like stuffed mushrooms using leftover stuffing, which could also be put together with ease the night before.

Focus on the bird

In the hours leading up to dinner, you'll want to focus your attention on the main attraction. As you go about seasoning, roasting and cutting your turkey, please be sure to wash your hands more times than you think you need to at each stage. Nobody wants to get sick on Thanksgiving. While following whatever recipe you decide to choose, make sure you have a thermometer to ensure the bird gets to its proper temperature. When it's done cooking, rest the turkey for a little bit before cutting, ensuring it cools down and retains its juices. Don't be afraid of the leftover juices in the roasting pan either, which can be used to enhance the flavor of your stuffing and gravy. METRO STAFF

DraftKings Sportsbook and MetroBet are serving up a Thanksgiving parlay special offer this week as you can get a risk-free $100 simply by going to tinyurl.com/txxphwf

This offer is only good for betting on Thanksgiving Day games, so take advantage now!

We have been absolutely killing it in this space with our marquee NFL picks lately, having hit on our last eight games!

Here's the recent history: Ravens -3.5 over Rams on MNF, Seahawks +1.5 over Eagles, Colts +3.5 against Texans on TNF, Chiefs -5.5 over Chargers on MNF, Eagles – Patriots Under 44.5 points, Browns -2.5 over Steelers on TNF, Seahawks +6 over 49ers on MNF and Raiders +1 over Chargers on TNF.

We'll look to keep things rolling on Thanksgiving Day with the best game of the holiday, and one that's particularly important to Eagles fans: Bills at Cowboys (4:30 p.m., CBS).

The spread on this game looks incredibly out-of-whack as Dallas should not be favored by -6.5 points against a team that has a superior record to them.

Not only is Buffalo 8-3 compared to the Cowboys at 6-5, but the Bills also have the best record in the entire NFL against the spread at 7-3-1.

Bills quarterback Josh Allen has cut down on his mistakes, as he's thrown just one interception in his last six games – and the Buffalo defense remains one of the more underrated units in the league.

Buffalo is allowing just 184.3 yards per game through the air this season, good for third in the league behind the 49ers and Patriots defenses. They're also decent against the run, giving up 104.4 yards per game (14th in NFL).

The Cowboys have shown this season that they cannot handle a competent defensive unit as their losses this season are as follows: New England (13-9), Minnesota (28-24), Jets (24-22), Packers (34-24) and Saints (12-10).

The Cowboys are your classic bully team as they are more than happy to punch weaklings in the mouth, but can't handle when they are decked in the jaw themselves. Look for the Bills to be the Ralphie to Dallas' Scott Farkus as the holiday season opens.

The play: Bills +6.5

NFL Week 13 betting: Packers at Giants

The Packers will be looking to wipe the bad taste from their mouths following a 37-8 shellacking courtesy of the 49ers on Sunday Night Football, and the Giants should oblige them this holiday weekend.

The Giants have lost seven straight tilts, all with uninspiring rookie signal caller Daniel Jones (62.5 percent completion rate, 6.4 yards per attempt, 17-8 TD-INT ratio) as the starter. "Big Blue" has averaged just 18.6 points per game since the Duke product usurped command from Eli Manning.

It seems unlikely that New York's offense will be able to keep up with Aaron Rodgers and company. Their defense, ranked 29th in points allowed per game, should offer little resistance. Rodgers was under duress throughout last Sunday's dismal effort, getting sacked five times by San Francisco's top-rated pass rush, but he should have plenty of time to go through his progressions in this one as the Giants are just 19th in sacks this season.

Trends bettors should note that the G-Men are 5-15-1 against the spread in their last 21 home games, while the Packers have covered in each of their last five games following a spread loss.

Scoreless Embiid has chance to rebound vs. Kings

The 76ers star had a historically bad night on Monday against the Raptors.

JOE PANTORNO

GETTY IMAGES

Monday night couldn't have gone worse for Joel Embiid.

The Philadelphia 76ers star center was held scoreless for the first time in his NBA career in a 101-96 loss to a Toronto Raptors, who knocked them out of the playoffs in heartbreaking fashion last season.

He went 0-for-11 from the field and 0-for-3 from the free throw line while getting handled once again by Raptors big man Marc Gasol.

Per ESPN Stats & Info, it was the most field goal attempts without a make by a 76ers player in the shot-clock era (since 1954-55).

Embiid's fellow countryman in Raptors star forward Pascal Siakam dropped 25 points on the Sixers, including a last-second dunk while up three — which wasn't necessarily the best display of sportsmanship. Granted, Embiid hasn't really conformed to that sportsmanship code, either, throughout his young NBA career.

The Sixers star also had to deal with famous Raptors fan and recording artist Drake, who was seen continuously chirping him from his courtside seats.

Again, not a banner night for Embiid.

"I can't have this type of production," he said after the game. "I would have never thought I would be here talking about zero points in an NBA game. But it is what it is."

"Some nights you make shots, some nights you don't."

The loss snapped a four-game winning streak, though Josh Richardson put together a strong showing with 25 points while Ben Simmons added 10 points and a season-high 14 assists.

"Getting zero production from me offensively and we still end up being pretty close," Embiid said. "That says a lot about the group of guys we've got. We got a lot of talent. We got a lot of guys that can pick it up when someone is cold so that's great to see."

The Sixers' schedule softens with that difficult trip to Toronto know in the books.

Philadelphia hosts the Sacramento Kings on Wednesday night before heading to Madison Square Garden to face the Knicks on Friday.

Expect Embiid to get back on track as he's averaged 24.3 points and 14.3 rebounds per game in four career outings against the Kings.

However, the 76ers have had their problems with the Western Conference minnows, losing three of their last four meetings dating back to the 2017-18 season.

While this is a Sacramento team that has not made the playoffs since 2006, things are looking up for the organization.

Buddy Hield is continuing his development as a legitimate scorer in the NBA, averaging 20.4 points per game this season while speedy point guard De'Aaron Fox is posting 18.2 points and seven assists per night.

A 7-9 start for the Kings won't jump off the page, especially in the Western Conference, but it's the organization's third-best start through 16 games this decade.

Should the Eagles consider Dez Bryant?

Carson Wentz needs help at wide receiver. A familiar divisional foe could be a legitimate option.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

With Alshon Jeffery and Nelson Agholor injured, head coach Doug Pederson was forced to roll out a pass-catching group consisting of JJ Arcega-Whiteside, Jordan Matthews, Mack Hollins and Greg Ward for Sunday's 17-9 loss to the Seattle Seahawks.

It immediately put struggling quarterback Carson Wentz in a difficult position — playing a stout Seahawks defense with a bunch of castoffs on the outside.

The results were exactly what was expected. Wentz threw for 256 yards — averaging just 7.7 yards per completion — with a touchdown and two interceptions.

Twelve of his 33 completions were to tight end Zach Ertz and another seven were to his backup, Dallas Goedert.

Ward — who was a practice squad call-up on Saturday — led all Eagles wide receivers with six catches.

The Eagles didn't waste much time tweaking things up. They cut Matthews on Monday to bring his third stint with the organization to an end after two weeks.

It suggests that Agholor and Jeffery could be good to go for Sunday against the Miami Dolphins, as Pederson admitted both players were "trending" in the right direction.

Jeffery has been out since Week 9 with an ankle issue while Agholor was sidelined last week because of his knee.

Even with them in the lineup, the Eagles haven't been able to replicate the kind of offensive output experienced with DeSean Jackson in the mix.

The veteran deep threat hauled in a pair of 50-plus-yard touchdowns in Week 1, helping Wentz put up a season-high 313 yards against the Washington Redskins.

Since Jackson's abdominal injury, though, Wentz has eclipsed the 300-yard passing mark just once.

Wentz's 230 yards per game this season ranks 22nd in the NFL, which isn't nearly the type of production the Eagles expected when they signed him to a four-year extension.

While he hasn't been the transcendental playmaker that he once was during his first two seasons, there is a lack of legitimate wide receivers that could go out and come up big in important situations.

It will lead the Eagles to scour the free agent market and draft board this upcoming offseason, but desperation to make the playoffs now could force GM Howie Roseman to try and find a temporary solution.

Amongst available free agent receivers, former Cowboys standout Dez Bryant could be an option as the third receiver behind a healthy Jeffery and Agholor.

Per reports, Bryant was expected to begin contacting NFL teams about a comeback this week after recovering from a torn ACL that ended his stint with the New Orleans Saints before it even began.

Bryant hasn't appeared in an NFL game since the 2017 season when he posted 838 yards and six touchdowns in 16 games with Dallas.

While he built a reputation as a brass, top-line receiver over his eight-year career, he knows the kind of role he'll assume down the stretch in 2019.

"I'm not trying to go nowhere and be a starter on a team," Bryant wrote earlier this month on Twitter. "I want to contribute because I know I will be able too... I'm feeling good."

Taking a chance on Bryant could be a low-risk, high-reward scenario for an Eagles team desperate for help on the outside for Wentz.

A veteran with big-play capabilities — even if they're slowed down — would only open up more opportunities for Wentz moving forward.

Offer Bryant the extra motivation of catching his former team for the top spot in the NFC East and Wentz's offense could open up with a bonafide third option amongst his wide receivers.
